

Tegenspel

- When partner leads a suit in which you have the ace-king as well as a side suit singleton and your plan is to switch to your singleton, win the opening lead with the ACE, planting the thought in partner's mind that declarer has the king, and then switch to your singleton. If you win the opening lead with the king and then shift to an obvious short suit, partner should play you for a doubleton.

If East had a singleton diamond originally, he should win the first spade with the ACE purposely fooling his partner and then return the diamond. Now West won't worry about partner having the SK and will return a diamond which East will ruff.

If on the other hand, East wins the first spade with the KING and returns a diamond, West can reason that East cannot have a singleton diamond or else he would have won the first trick with the ACE!

- When dummy has three cards in the suit that has been led and third hand also has three cards headed by the 8 or lower, there is no good reason to play the eight. It will seldom drive out anything of value and partner will remain in doubt as to the count.
- The discard of any high honor denies holding the honor directly above it.

Bieden

- Do not bid bad suits on good hands.
